IT BEGINS to look doubtful if Senator Platt can force through a State constabulary bill. His leading newspaper organ, the New York Sun, is strong in its opposition to the scheme and from newspaper comments it is plain that there is strong opposition in his party to this proposed violation of the principle of home rule.

THE CASE OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Students of economic and political problems will find much of interest, for many years to come, in the history of Newfoundland during the past 20 years; for this history is the story of a great struggle between a popular form of government on one hand and concentrated wealth on the other.

The present troubles began in Newfoundland in a desire to foster internal improvements by means of railroad building. The people were wildly interested, and between 1880 and 1890 there was considerable ill-directed effort at railroad construction by a defuncting American company, and then by the colonial government itself.

Here, then, was a railroad owned by the State, running through an interior which was about wholly unsettled and incapable for a considerable period of developing profitable local traffic.

The operation of the new railroad system became a serious problem for the colonial government and in this emergency Contractor Reid saw his opportunity. He offered to operate the railroad for 10 years in return for an absolute grant of 5,000 acres of land to each mile of the road.

The Conservatives came into power on the popular cry of "no more concessions to Reid," but most grievously disappointed the people of the colony.

meant to accommodate and repair the boat of disabled steamers which make the port every year, he was to buy for $225,000, little more than half its cost. Telegraph lines, 1,000 miles in all, which cost $200,000, he was to buy for $125,000. He was to provide eight steamers to ply around the different sections of the coast, to carry mails, passengers and freight for 30 years, for $150,000 a year in subsidies.

The Republican, in continuing this strange story, goes on to say: "And the wonder of it is that Reid's scheme was put into contract form and accepted by the colonial government and Legislature of Newfoundland. Under it he virtually bought the entire railroad system for $1,000,000, one-tenth of its cost; he bought all the telegraph lines at nearly half price, and also the government dry dock; he acquired a monopoly of mail, passenger and freight carriage on the coast line for 30 years, and annual subsidies besides; while on top of all, he became the largest individual land owner in the world.

"An agitation of great violence began in Newfoundland, but Reid was still on his mettle. His next step was to propose that he be allowed to transfer all his properties and concessions to a limited liability company, which he would capitalize for $25,000,000. The winter ministry did not dare to grant the desired permission, and soon after was defeated at the polls.

Time is drawing nearer and nearer towards the holidays and many are now thinking and worrying what Christmas gifts to buy for their relatives and friends. Robert D. Louis, jeweler at State St. has a fine and complete line of holiday goods suitable for everybody and everybody's pocketbook.
